

LIFE HERE

The 9 p.m. Show

This is the peak of coziness for Arctic reindeer herders.

NIGHT LIGHTS That tent might as well be a Four Seasons in the Scandinavian tundra. It's called a lavvu, and is pitched by the nomadic Sami people as they herd reindeer across the region's frozen waters and islands. The lavvu's slope prevents snow from piling up during blizzards. An hour before I took this shot, Anders, a Sami elder, looked up and said, "Around 9 o'clock the [Northern] Lights should appear." Like clockwork, they did.

by LOLA AKINMADE AKERSTRÖM